by AP Van Houtte 2018 Cited by 10 Land cover/Vegetation The worldwide distribution and classification of land cover is the focus of the Land Use and Cover and Quality of Land Use (LUQ) and Global Land Cover 2000 (GLC-2000). The LUQ contains information on precision models of land cover. It uses satellite remote sensing data and a wealth of global and regional data sources that are combined into a global land cover classification system. This classification can be used for land-cover studies worldwide and data for production of many applications. Cited by 6 Areas are classified based on several data products, land cover classifications, and analyses on the land. These data products provide classification and spatial patterns of land cover for the U.S. and other tasks/applications. This paper describes the history of changes in land cover and land use, highlights recent trends in land cover and land use, and gives an explanation of data source strengths and weaknesses. by CB Spencer 2018 Cited by 5 There are many factors that affect the land, including elevation, vegetative cover, climate, and human population, to name a few. 3D maps are used to provide an understanding of the land in order to design, manage, and monitor it, as well as to plan and execute conservation and restoration projects. These maps can be categorized into four different types of 3D maps. This article gives an overview of these maps and explains how Google Earth is used in the creation, editing, and analysis of 3D maps. 4. by ME Shapley 2018 Cited by 3 The USGS maintains several bibliographic databases with information about hydrology, land cover, land use, soils, surface water, and vegetation, as well as geospatial data sets. To facilitate data sharing for other users, the databases are available in a variety of formats. This article describes each of the databases, their content, and how to access them. . by SA Sayyed 2018 Cited by 2 Topography. The U.S. Geological Survey has a digital elevation model of the United States (DEM) available via Google Earth.. 3) using the Esri ArcGIS Explorer functionality.
